Mary Keller (Ph.D., Syracuse University) is a historian of religion who works at the intersection of feminist theory, postcolonial theory, and Indigenous studies theory in order to study the relationship of religious lives to struggles for meaning and power. Her current research examines the role of sacred land in a world of global capital, money and agency, recent developments in theory and method in the study of spirit possession, and the religious dimensions of climate change.

Michael Zbaraschuk (Ph.D. The Claremont Graduate University) is an Associate Professor of Religion at Pacific Lutheran University in Tacoma, WA. He received his M.A. in 1998 and his Ph.D. in 2002, both from The Claremont Graduate University, and both specializing in the philosophy of religion and theology. His research interests include process theology, radical theology, constructive theology, religious pluralism, and millennials and religion (especially their declining interest in it).

Weekend sessions include:

How the Right is Wrong on Climate Science: The need for humans to reorient themselves to creation is nothing new, but can we recognize it?

How the Right is Wrong for Millennials: Attendees will think through new research on religious decline and why so many 20- and 30-something are moving away from religion altogether.

Re-orienting Right and Wrong: A new perspective on experiencing dichotomies in our personal, political, and spiritual lives.

Ways to Talk Beyond Right and Wrong: Practical tools for talking with religious fundamentalists and moving beyond typical arguments and resistance.
